Brand New Book  Print on Demand .History and background Starting back in the late 1980s Tim Wrey wrote a series of 30 articles on wildlife for the inhouse journal of an Auroville-based computer manufacturing unit, with the aim of arousing interest in the natural world among the computer geeks working there. For years those articles lay gathering dust, but sometime in 2009 he decided to make them accessible to the students of Auroville s schools by way of a book, which he hoped would not only help them learn about the wonderful natural world around us, but also motivate them to protect and preserve it for future generations. However, first he decided to fill in some gaps in the articles coverage by adding a few more on missing topics, probably 10-or-so, but as time went by he kept thinking of more and more topics. From 30 the number eventually rose to over 70. Typically he worked on average 2+ hours a night on the book for nearly 21/2 years as he prepared the text, researching via books and on the Internet for the extra material needed. Being a complete amateur, just a nature lover, and never having done a book before, he was unaware of the need to make note at the time of sources of information used, and later get permission to quote them. By the time he became aware of this it was too late: he had already explored the contents of literally hundreds of sites, making notes and downloading sentences and occasional short passages. Now he is in an uncomfortable situation, aware that the book may contain material that should not have been included without permission. Anyone who finds such material...
