Context-Aware Service Provisioning in Converging Networks

By Juan Miguel Espinosa Carlin

Shaker Verlag Nov 2010, 2010. Buch. Book Condition: Neu. 21x14.8x cm. Neuware - Mobile and fixed telecommunications network operators have been experi M encing aggressive competition from Internet content providers that use the operators' infrastructure for providing subscribers with a wide choice of webbased mobile multimedia services. For keeping pace, operators designed and implemented strategies aimed at enabling the development of mobile services whose differentiation relies on their key strengths including call control, messaging, location, Presence, etc. Even though some standardization initiatives enabling the homogeneous exposure of the mentioned functionality are already in place, considerable work still has to be done for easing the interaction with it on the service development side. The approach presented in this Dissertation aims at enhancing this interaction by proposing a context management platform that enables the developrnent of mobile services from a context awareness perspective. Within the platform, a Context-Aware Service is conceptualized as a component implementing application logic mapping context notifications generated by Context Providers as result of events happening inside and outside the network into invocations of Service Capabilities implementing functionality aimed at triggering some actions based on the received context notifications. Built on top of on well-known telecommunications concepts, the platform...
