Not illustrated. 1888 Excerpt: to the outskirts of Nyangwe, where we were met by Abed bin Salim, an old man of sixty-five years of age, Mohammed bin Sayid, a young Arab with a remarkably long nose and small eyes, Sheik Abed s fundis or elephant-hunters, and several Wangwana, all dressed in spotless white shirts, crimson fezzes, and sandals. Sheik Abed was pleased to monopolize me, by offering me a house in his neighborhood. The manner that we entered Nyangwe appeared, from subsequent conversation, to have struck Sheik Abed, who, from his long residence there, had wit nessed the arrival and departure of very many caravans. There was none of the usual firing of guns and wild shouting and frenzied action; and the order and steadiness of veterans, t .ie close files of a column which tolerably well understood by this time the difference between discipline and lawlessness with its stragglers...
