It is essentially the second paper referred to in the Preface of the earlier report entitled, Preliminary Discussion of the Logical Design of an Electronic Computing Instrument, by A. W.Burks, H.H. Goldstine and John von Neunann, dated 28 June 1946. During the time which has intervened it has become clear that the issuance of a greater number of reports wi I I be desirable. In this sense the report, Preliminary Discussion of the Logical Design of an Electronic Computing Instrunent should be viewed as Part I of the sequence of our reports on the Electronic Computer. The present report is Volume I of Part II. A Volume II of Part II wi I I foltow within a few months. Part II is intended to giv an account of our methods of coding and of the pnilosophy which governs it. It contains what we believe to be an adequate number of typical examples, going from the simplest case up to several of high complexity, and in reasonable didactic completeness. On the other hand. Part II in its present form is preliminary In certain srgnili cant ways. On this account the folloving ought to be said. oil We do not discuss the orders control I ing the inputs and outputs and the stopping of the machine. (The inputs and outputs are, hovjever,...
