Consider any series with ends; suppose that each term x of it is contained within some particular interval of terms of the series between and (the interval being the series of these latter terms, together with f and f), and apply the argument of III. If we suppose that we can get from end to end of the series by using the ordinal numbers less than 7, where 7 may be of any class, we can replace all the intervals by a finite partial-series of them, by the successive abolition of Limes-terms. Thus we see that, given a series of type fi, the necessary and sufficient condition that the...
