SEVERAL NINETEENTH-CENTURY NON-HEDONISTS It is of course impossible, except in a very general way, to characterize as a whole the non-hedonistic writers since Kant, which are here to be noticed. With the rebirth of national self-consciousness at the beginning of the nineteenth century, and the enthusiastic efforts and sacrifices made by patriots in consequence, with the great industrial development that has made men and nations more economically interdependent, and with the increased human sympathy revealed in a thousand ways that imply a recognition of common brotherhood, the social nature of morality and duty could not fail to be recognized. This closer sense of mutual interests and sympathies has led Utilitarians to believe that a mans personal happiness is necessarily dependent upon universal happiness. To nonhedonistic writers who are not satisfied with the arguments for this kind of a reconciliation, the essentially social character of morality, and its superiority and fundamental opposition to the solicitations of personal pleasure, have been unquestioned. With a clearer sense of the unity of the conscious life, and a better feeling for historical development--results due in a considerable measure to the work of Kant--there is no longer to be observed so. sharp a dualism between happiness and moral jiction, nor such arbitrary, external methods employed at overcoming it, as we have seen in the ethical postulates of Kant. Speaking generally, two attitudes toward happiness may be distinguished. Some have extruded what have seemed the selfish, anti-social, and unaesthetic elements from...
