Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1901. Excerpt: . . . which legend says turn into geese. I was a goose barnacle. Down in the vasty deeps among the coral, the dulse grasses and the sea-weeds I was born, and being a goose barnacle I supposed that I would turn into a goose by and by. We belong to the oldest known family of barnacles, the Lepas. Our family history dates back to the cretaceous period. Long before Mother Nature even thought of the Irish Elk, the cave bears, the elephant, the great horse, the caribou or the mastodon, she created the goose barnacle. Fifty years ago, however, the world knew very little about us, or our history. Cuvier, Gerard and others classed us as mollusks, but Darwin was wiser. Like the great Goethe he saw into things. He studied us. To him we owe the rescue of. our history and traditions from oblivion. He proved to the world that we were of ancient lineage. But it is my life that you want to know about and not that of my ancestors. I always get bothered when talking about those people called scientists. They contradict each other so often that one does not really know what the truth is unless he digs it up for himself. We barnacles, however, still keep faith with Darwin. Why, no one knew anything at all about the corals down here in the sea until Darwin went out on a voyage in the Beagle and coming home told the world...
